Your blog post has a title and a content area. The title is like the headline of a newspaper article, so it should generally be short.

Once upon a time...

The Spokesmen Collective was established by a group of NYU students in 1978, in the basement of the Student Union. Working away in between classes and after shifts, on weekends and every moment to be spared, the Spokesmen found a true community of individuals centered around a simple idea. Since then our mission has always been to get every person on a bicycle they love. When you ride something that is truly unique, you are able to make a statement about who you really are.

If you visit our shop, currently located in downtown Manhattan, you'll find friendly faces and comprehensive advice. We come from a variety of bike backgrounds: some of us race, some commute and some tour - we are parents, students, and lovers of this simple machine! From education and do-it-yourself workshops to professional custom assembly, we truly are a full-service community shop. Browse our online shop, or come to our brick-and-mortar to chat about what you love, what you need, and how we can be of service.

Click Add Categories if you'd like to tag your post. These tagged categories will appear on your sidebar, making it easier for visitors to your blog to find posts that cover certain topics. Categories can be whatever you like, or you can forgo them altogether.

From here, you can also schedule your post for a later date and time, and turn comments on or off.

When you're all done, you have a number of options related to publishing and sharing.

In the upper right, there are two buttons: Save and Post. Clicking Post immediately publishes this Post to your website, and clicking Save will create a draft so you can go back and edit it later.

When you click Save, you'll see a Drafts button is added to the lower right. Clicking Drafts lets you view all your works in progress to edit and post them when you're ready.
